Weights and measures law and the sale of fish

Introduction

The sale of fish (whether fresh, chilled, frozen, salted, cooked or processed) is controlled by weights and measures law. This brief summary is designed to help you to understand these legal requirements.

Must I sell all fish by weight?

As a general rule, all sales of fish (other than shellfish in the shell, jellied fish, pickled fish and fried fish) loose from bulk must be by net weight (the weight of the produce without wrapping) - although if the wrapping or container is sufficiently light then the sale may be by gross weight. A plastic or paper bag (or other container weighing less than 5 g) will probably be sufficiently light for the sale to be by gross weight.

The weight must be in metric units (kg and/or g) and must be made known to the buyer before payment is made. This may be done either:

- by weighing the goods in front of the customer - the scales must be clearly visible; or
- by giving the customer the weight in writing - perhaps by using a combined weight and price ticket.

What about pre-packing fish?

If you wish to pre-pack fish (make up packages in containers prior to sale), you must clearly mark each package with an indication of the net weight. This rule applies to all pre-packed fish (including shellfish in the shell, jellied fish, pickled fish and fried fish).

Weighing equipment

All weighing equipment used to weigh or pre-pack fish must be of an approved type and carry an approval mark to show that it has been properly tested.

Weights must be stated in metric units (kg and/or g) although you may, if you wish, also indicate an equivalent imperial weight (provided this is no more prominent than the metric indication)

What about fish pies, puddings and flans?

You do not have to sell fish pies, puddings or flans by weight.
